BODY BUILDING

With a model this size, it made sense to construct the legs and body separately. Once the leg design was in place, designers were able to recreate the unique combination of all the different angles and geometric shapes of the body with existing LEGO® elements and two newly developed angled plate elements (also found in the 75304 Darth Vader Helmet set).

The AT-AT body holds a troop section with room for up to 40 snowtroopers, weapons and heavy battle equipment. The upper deck features backpack charger, troop benches, fuel cells and energiser rods; the lower deck is a deployment staging platform and a garage with room for four bikes.

Design Director & Creative Lead,
LEGO® Star Wars™

I've built with LEGO® bricks all my life, I've worked as a LEGO designer for over 20 years and designed over a hundred models and two hundred new elements. And for as long as I can remember, this model has been at the top of my design list, and on LEGO Star Wars fans' wish lists. The AT-AT walker is one of the most intimidating vehicles in the Star Wars universe. It's super tall and scary to the Rebels on the ground of Hoth, so of course our model had to live up to that. It's more than 60 cm tall, consists of more than 6,700 LEGO pieces and weighs about 6 kilos. The sheer size, weight and mechanics of it made it a daunting challenge. As always, when designing LEGO models, it helps to spar with other designers, and we were able to make the model authentic, stable and displayable by incorporating a few elements developed by other projects, and just one new element. I'm very pleased to see it come to life.
